The origin and development of applause

Whether you clap, cheer or whistle a great public performance, you are following a long tradition.

- A Scholars aren't quite sure about the origins of applause, but the form that is still most common, clapping the hands together, was formalized in Western culture during and after performances. During the time of the Roman Republic (509 BC – 27 BC) the common way to end a play was for the chief actor to yell 'Valete et plaudite!' ('Goodbye and applause!') thus signaling to the audience that it was time for them to give praise by striking hands and making explosive noise. It's no surprise, then, that this became a means of crowd manipulation. Rome saw the rise of a professional class of applauders, or 'people who clapped for their dinner', hired to infiltrate crowds and manipulate their reaction to performances. Actors would hire a dozen or so people to spread out among their audiences and prolong the applause, or, if they were feeling especially bold, to start 'spontaneous' chants and shouts of praise.
- B The Roman Republic came to an end and was replaced by the Roman Empire (27 BC – 476 AD) where applause became a way for leaders to interact directly with their citizens. One of the chief methods they used to estimate their standing with the people was gauging the greetings they got when they entered the arena. Leaders became astute at reading the volume, the rhythm, and the length of the crowd's claps for clues about how well they were doing as officials and lawmakers. 'We should think of it as an ancient type of opinion poll,' says Greg Aldrete, a professor of history. 'This is how you gauge the people.' Roman leaders were gathering data about people by listening to applause.
- C Clever leaders of the ancient world researched their rivals, too. Cicero, the Roman lawyer, would send friends to stand around outside the arena, taking notes to see what kind of greeting each official got when he entered, the better to see who was beloved by the people, and who was not. They had a lot of information to assess. 'Ancient crowds were more interactive than they are today,' Aldrete points out. 'There was a lot of back and forth between speakers and crowds. And particularly in the Greco-Roman world, crowds, especially in cities, were really good at communicating messages through rhythmic clapping, sometimes coupled with shouts.' The coding was, he says, invaluable when assessing an orator's fortunes.
- D Around the first century AD, those systems of applause became more and more elaborate. Applause no longer meant, simply, 'claps'. While Greco-Roman audiences certainly smacked their palms together the same way we do today, their overall strategies of applause were much more varied than clapping alone. Crowds expressed degrees of approval of the person or persons before them, ranging from claps, to snaps (of the finger and thumb), to waves (of the edge of the toga). The emperor Aurelian decided to replace this gesture by waving a special handkerchief instead, a prop which he then distributed to all Roman citizens, so they would never be without a way to praise him.

- E Although style of applause may have changed over the centuries, the need to manipulate remained. 16th-century French poet Jean Daurat is credited with bringing back the Roman practice of hiring professional applauders. In France, this group became known as a 'claque'. Daurat handed out tickets to his own performances to people who promised to applaud at the end. By the early 1820s, clagues had become institutionalized, with an agency in Paris specializing in the distribution of the claqueurs' services. The historian William B. Cohen describes the intricate price lists agencies of this kind would hand out to potential patrons: polite clapping would cost this many francs, enthusiastic applause would cost this many. The claque also underwent a kind of classification: the rieurs (laughers) would laugh loudly at the jokes; the pleureurs (criers) would feign tears in reaction to performances; the commissaires (officers) would learn a play or a piece of music by heart and then call attention to its best parts. This practice spread to Milan, to Vienna, and to London before falling out of fashion. The claque lost its power once people became aware of its tricks.
- F And clapping itself evolved. In the 18th century, symphonies and concerts became more serious, aligning themselves with the reverence and spirituality associated with religious ceremonies. Knowing when to maintain silence, as well as when to clap, became a mark of sophistication, a kind of code for audiences to learn. Applause became a matter of 'do' or 'don't', so losing many old shades of meaning. Those changes changed performers, too. Applause became much less of a true dialogue with an audience, especially so with opera, where the singers saw it as part of a basic transaction with the crowd. So by the time the 19th century arrived, applause had become standardized and institutionalized, and had become an expectation rather than the reward it used to be.
- G In the 21st century we're reinventing applause, to make it what it used to be: a coded form of communication. More and more the digital world allows us to link and like and share through our devices. By connecting with others in this way, we become part of the performance by participating in it, demonstrating our appreciation by amplifying and extending the show through commenting and praising. Our kind of applause matters more now, in many ways, because it is no longer momentary and short-lived, but is far more permanent instead.

Questions 14–20 Heading 题

题号	段落	答案	Heading 翻译	详细定位与原文翻译	详细解释
14	Paragraph A	iii	掌声作为剧场行为最初出现	定位句：“During the time of the Roman Republic... the common way to end a play was for the chief actor to yell ‘Valete et plaudite!’... thus signaling to the audience that it was time for them to give praise by striking hands and making explosive noise.” 译：在罗马共和国时期，一出戏结束时，通常由主演喊出“再见并鼓掌！”这就向观众发出信号：现在该通过拍手和制造响亮声音来表达赞赏了。	A 段核心不是讲政治，也不是讲现代掌声，而是讲 clapping the hands together was formalized... during and after performances ，即“鼓掌”作为表演结束后的固定行为被正式化。后半段虽然提到雇人鼓掌、操纵观众，但这是在解释掌声很快被利用，不是全段主旨。最能概括的是 iii：掌声在剧场中最初成为一种行为。
15	Paragraph B	v	政治人物利用掌声评估自己的受欢迎程度	定位句：“applause became a way for leaders to interact directly with their citizens... One of the chief methods they used to estimate their standing with the people was gauging the greetings they got when they entered the arena.” 译：掌声成了领导者与公民直接互动的一种方式。他们用来估计自己在民众中地位的主要方法之一，就是衡量他们进入竞技场时所获得的欢迎程度。	B 段反复出现 leaders / estimate their standing / how well they were doing as officials and lawmakers / gathering data about people by listening to applause 。这说明政治领导者通过掌声判断自己受欢迎不受欢迎，所以选 v。注意不是 x，因为 B 段讲的是领导者判断“自己”的民意基础，而不是判断“对手”。
16	Paragraph C	x	利用掌声判断对手有多受欢迎	定位句：“Clever leaders of the ancient world researched their rivals, too... taking notes to see what kind of greeting each official got... the better to see who was beloved by the people, and who was not.” 译：古代聪明的领导者也会研究他们的竞争对手。西塞罗会派朋友站在竞技场外做记录，观察每位官员入场时获得什么样的欢迎，以便更好地判断谁受人民爱戴，谁不受欢迎。	C 段关键词是 rivals ，也就是“竞争者/对手”。段落重点不是自己受欢迎程度，而是通过观众的欢迎、节奏性鼓掌、喊声等，判断其他演说者或政治人物的前途和人气。因此对应 x：用掌声判断对手有多受欢迎。
17	Paragraph D	vii	古代除了拍手之外使用的不同鼓掌方式	定位句：“Applause no longer meant, simply, ‘claps’... their overall strategies of applause were much more varied than clapping alone. Crowds expressed degrees of approval... ranging from claps, to snaps... to waves...” 译：掌声不再仅仅意味着“拍手”。希腊—罗马观众表达赞许的整体策略远比单纯拍手更加多样。人群表达认可程度的方式包括拍手、打响指、挥动长袍边缘等。	D 段中心是 applause 的形式复杂化了，而且强调 more varied than clapping alone 。后面还提到奥勒良皇帝用特殊手帕来代替某种挥动手势。所以本段讲的是古代掌声/赞许表达的多种方式，而不仅是拍手，选 vii。
18	Paragraph E	viii	虚假赞赏的重新出现与消失	定位句：“16th-century French poet Jean Daurat is credited with bringing back the Roman practice of hiring professional applauders... This practice spread to Milan, to Vienna, and to London before falling out of fashion. The claque lost its power once people became aware of its tricks.” 译：16 世纪法国诗人 Jean Daurat 被认为重新带回了罗马时期雇用职业鼓掌者的做法。后来这种做法传播到米兰、维也纳和伦敦，之后逐渐过时。一旦人们意识到其中的伎俩，claque 就失去了影响力。	E 段讲的是 claque ，也就是雇佣来的“职业捧场团”。它本质上是一种 fake appreciation / 虚假赞赏 。段落从“bringing back the Roman practice”讲到“falling out of fashion / lost its power”，所以是“重新出现并消失”。选 viii。
19	Paragraph F	i	音乐表演对鼓掌礼仪的影响	定位句：“In the 18th century, symphonies and concerts became more serious... Knowing when to maintain silence, as well as when to clap, became a mark of sophistication, a kind of code for audiences to learn.” 译：18 世纪，交响乐和音乐会变得更加严肃，与宗教仪式中的敬畏和精神性相联系。知道什么时候保持安静、什么时候鼓掌，成为一种成熟有教养的标志，也成了观众需要学习的一种规则。	F 段关键词是 symphonies and concerts / opera / when to maintain silence / when to clap / code for audiences 。这说明音乐会和歌剧的发展改变了观众鼓掌的时机和礼仪。选 i。vi “音乐如何影响观众鼓掌程度”不对，因为本段不是说音乐本身让掌声更多或更少，而是说音乐表演场景让鼓掌变成一种礼仪规范。
20	Paragraph G	iv	一种比以往影响更深远的掌声形式	定位句：“More and more the digital world allows us to link and like and share... Our kind of applause matters more now... because it is no longer momentary and short-lived, but is far more permanent instead.” 译：数字世界越来越允许我们通过设备进行连接、点赞和分享。如今我们的这种“掌声”在许多方面更加重要，因为它不再是短暂即逝的，而是更加永久。	G 段讲的是 21 世纪数字时代的“掌声”：点赞、分享、评论、赞美。它的特点是 not momentary and short-lived, but far more permanent ，也就是比过去的现场掌声传播更久、更远、更有延续性，所以选 iv。

Questions 21–22 多选题重排版

题干翻译：

以下哪两项关于法国的 “claque (职业捧场团/雇佣鼓掌者)” 是正确的？

答案	选项翻译	定位句与翻译	详细解释
A	作为法国的一种做法，它最早出现在16世纪。	定位句：“16th-century French poet Jean Daurat is credited with bringing back the Roman practice of hiring professional applauders. In France, this group became known as a ‘claque.’” 译：16世纪法国诗人 Jean Daurat 被认为重新带回了罗马时期雇用职业鼓掌者的做法。在法国，这一群体被称为 “claque”。	A 的关键是 as a practice in France ，不是说“职业鼓掌者在全世界第一次出现于16世纪”，因为罗马时期已经有类似做法。原文说 Jean Daurat 在16世纪把这种罗马做法重新带回法国，并且在法国这种群体被称为 claque，所以 A 正确。
D	Claqueurs 被分成不同类别。	定位句：“The claque also underwent a kind of classification: the rieurs... the pleureurs... the commissaires...” 译：claque 也经历了一种分类：rieurs 会在笑话处大声笑；pleureurs 会假装流泪；commissaires 会背熟戏剧或音乐作品，然后提醒观众注意其中最精彩的部分。	D 对应原文的 classification 。原文明确列举了不同类型的 claqueurs：负责笑的、负责哭的、负责引导观众注意精彩部分的。因此 D 正确。

错误选项

选项	选项翻译	定位句与翻译	为什么不选
B	它在法国并没有成为一种广泛传播的做法。	定位句：“By the early 1820s, claques had become institutionalized, with an agency in Paris specializing in the distribution of the claqueurs’ services.” 译：到19世纪20年代早期，claques 已经制度化了，巴黎甚至有一家机构专门分配职业捧场者的服务。	B 与原文相反。原文说它已经 institutionalized (制度化/机构化) ，还有专门 agency 提供服务，说明它在法国已经相当成熟，而不是“不广泛”。
C	雇佣费用取决于客户的名气。	定位句：“polite clapping would cost this many francs, enthusiastic applause would cost this many.” 译：礼貌性的鼓掌要花多少法郎，热烈的掌声又要花多少法郎。	原文说价格取决于 掌声服务的类型或热烈程度 ，比如 polite clapping 和 enthusiastic applause，而不是取决于 the fame of the client (客户的名气) 。C 属于无中生有。
E	这种做法没有传播到法国以外的其他国家。	定位句：“This practice spread to Milan, to Vienna, and to London before falling out of fashion.” 译：这种做法传播到了米兰、维也纳和伦敦，之后才逐渐过时。	E 与原文直接相反。原文明确说它传播到了 Milan、Vienna 和 London，也就是法国以外的地区。

Questions 23–26 Summary 填空题

题号	答案	题干翻译	详细定位与原文翻译	详细解释
23	silence	在18世纪，人们可以通过理解什么时候 ____ 或鼓掌是合适的，来展示自己的优越/有教养。	定位句：“Knowing when to maintain silence, as well as when to clap, became a mark of sophistication...” 译：知道什么时候保持安静，以及什么时候鼓掌，成为一种成熟、有教养的标志。	空格前是 either ，后面是 or applause was appropriate ，对应原文的 when to maintain silence, as well as when to clap 。题干里的“show their superiority”对应原文 a mark of sophistication ，即显示自己有教养。因此答案是 silence 。
24	opera	18世纪的表演者，尤其是唱 ____ 的人，不再与观众进行有意义的对话。	定位句：“Applause became much less of a true dialogue with an audience, especially so with opera...” 译：掌声越来越不再是一种与观众之间真实的对话，尤其是在歌剧中。	题干“Performers... in particular those singing in the ____”对应原文 especially so with opera 。因为是 ONE WORD ONLY，填 opera 。
25	reward	在19世纪，掌声不再作为给表演者的 ____。	定位句：“by the time the 19th century arrived, applause had become standardized and institutionalized, and had become an expectation rather than the reward it used to be.” 译：到19世纪时，掌声已经变得标准化和制度化，成了一种期待，而不再是它过去那样的奖励。	题干“was no longer offered as a ____ to performers”改写原文 rather than the reward it used to be 。所以答案是 reward 。
26	permanent	如今，我们表达认可的方式相比过去的掌声，被认为更加 ____。	定位句：“Our kind of applause matters more now... because it is no longer momentary and short-lived, but is far more permanent instead.” 译：如今我们的这种掌声在很多方面更重要，因为它不再是瞬间的、短暂的，而是更加永久。	题干“Nowadays our expressions of approval”指G段的数字时代点赞、分享、评论等。与过去短暂的现场掌声相比，现代“掌声”更加 permanent ，因为会在网络上留下痕迹并持续传播。
